

Red Flour Beetle Confused Flour Beetle

Red Flour Beetle

3. Red flour beetle

Confused Flour Beetle

These beetles are very similar. The red flour beetle can fly and is found more in southern states while the confused flour beetle does not fly and is found more in northern states. Both may be found in the Pacific Northwest.

Red & Confused Flour Beetles attack stored grain products such as flour, cereals, meal, crackers, beans, spices, pasta, cake mix, dried pet food, dried flowers, chocolate, nuts, seeds and museum specimens. They have chewing mouth parts, but do not bite or sting. These beetles are attracted to light. They will often be found in cracks and crevices where grain has been spilled as well as the product itself.
